'To Feleveia' – Until We Meet Again

The charms of Niue are like no other South Pacific Island. In fact, they are like nowhere else on Earth. Niue offers a banquet of rare and exciting delights, then allows space for you to explore and enjoy them on your own. Far from wrapping its visitors in commercial cotton padding, the island of Niue exposes the raw traveller within, the one inside that aches for genuine adventure and authentic experiences. This does not imply, however, that a holiday to Niue means sacrificing modern comforts, for the island's tourism industry is well equipped and its people are warm and accommodating. It does suggest though that instead of preparing for a holiday of retail therapy and passive entertainment, visitors to Niue should pack a pair of good walking shoes and their adventurous spirit.

Niue is a one-island destination, offering its abundant gifts within an oval shape approximately 68km in diameter. Being one of the world's largest raised coral atolls, its fascinating landscape is unlike the surrounding islands of Tonga, Samoa and the Cook Islands. Instead of long stretches of sandy beaches, the coastal limestone cliffs of Niue hide a vast network of magnificent caves and secluded swimming coves. Inland, the island shelters lush rainforests teeming with unique flora and fauna. These natural wonders exist in a pleasant climate that rarely reaches above 30°C in winter (May to October) and is similar throughout summer with possible increases in temperature (November to April). Originally settled by Polynesians from Samoa around 900AD, Niue is now classed as a self-governing country in free association with New Zealand, with the New Zealand dollar as local currency. Whilst English is spoken alongside the native Niuean language and all children receive a high level of western-style education, strong Polynesian roots predominate the Niuean lifestyle and their vibrant culture is cause for much celebration. Flights to Niue are serviced by Air New Zealand, flying from Auckland International Airport twice a week in peak season.

With a population on-island of less than 1500 people, the Niueans are like one big family. They smile and wave to all who pass, making visitors feel at home on arrival. With virtually no crime or dangerous wildlife, the island is a haven of relaxed exploration. In the daytime, discover spectacular walking tracks and caves, snorkel the coral reefs or dive amongst the crystal clear underwater caverns. Out to sea, enjoy Niue's world-class fishing, or swim with dolphins and migrating Humpback whales (July to September). At night, watch the giant coconut crabs emerging, and then satisfy a well-earned hunger at a selection of restaurants and eateries. At the end of just one adventurous day in Niue, upon retiring to any one of the charming accommodations available, visitors rest with a deep sense of satisfaction and a childlike awe for the natural world.
